Transforming Erith

Residents will start to see evidence of works commencing at Erith Station and the Carnegie building. Site signage is being posted in preparation for the start of improvements works which begin in early January 2018. .

These improvement works will include redesigning the public space to create better pedestrian, cycling and vehicle access and upgrading the station entrance with better signage and planting making the area more attractive. Public seating, lighting and cycle stands will also be added.

Scaffolding has been erected on the Carnegie building and works to start cleaning the building will begin this week.

Cllr Linda Bailey, Bexley's Cabinet Member for Regeneration and Growth said:

"Erith is one of the main locations we expect to benefit from our ambitious growth strategy for the borough, with an ongoing programme of regeneration aimed at developing the area into a thriving riverside community. We have big aspirations for the town and we are starting to see them become a reality".

The improvements in Erith are being funded by London Borough of Bexley and partners, including the Mayor of London. The aim is to create an active town centre that can make the most of Erith's unique setting by the River Thames.
